The most typical characteristics people use speaking about society are usually sounded like: pollution, welfare, bureaucracy, working hours, GM foods, medical care, convenience foods, public services and longevity. But let's find out what society is. It is the people in a particular area of country who have the same customs and laws. It is like an alive organism which is developed with every sphere of human-beings activity and it differs from one country to another.

There are following types of society such as traditional, modern, developed and undeveloped and several new types which show the way people life. By now we can determine post – industrial society – is a type no longer relying on heavy industry, consumer – where buying and selling is considered to be very important and throw – away in which things are not made to last a long time.

Moreover every society can be divided into groups, classes and tend to have particular characteristics.

As for Russian society nowadays it can't even be characterized with one type of description only but with a combination of features. And in my opinion this fact helps us understand how essentially different it can be. Let's examine our society deeper. I'd like to underline welfare. This very point determines the way of life and its quality.

Actually welfare becomes a crucial moment and, of course, I don't like this fact.

For example, if you need a good medical care you'd pay for it and so get the best doctors and treatment. When you want to get some kind of public service it would be more efficient if you pay. Money runs the world. It's a statement of contemporary life and that's why if you don't have money you'll have to come over inefficient public service such as bad medicine or bureaucracy thriving in every possible place. It'll take you much more time to do something finding yourself in overcrowded rooms waiting for your turn.

Moreover wealthy people can allow themselves not to use convenience and GM foods which are the false friends of women. They just hire a housekeeper who cooks and cleans the house for them bringing the time economy for being able to put up with long working hours and kiss their children before going to bed.

So, in the struggle for health, beauty and longevity the welfare takes the first place again. It's sad but our society depends on welfare more than ever. It becomes the most important value in the world.

A company can be also called a firm or a business. When it is produc-ing goods or trading, we say it is in business. A company which is just start-ing up is going into business and a firm which stops operating goes out of business. If a firm becomes bigger, it expands. The expansion means that a company will produce more goods or sell more products. A manufacturer produces goods. They are its products. When a manufacturing company expands, it means that it increases its production.

A company selling goods in large quantities (in bulk) is called a whole-saler. A person or a company buying in bulk (wholesale) and selling goods in small quantities is a retailer. Many local shops sell goods retail. Two or more companies which sell or manufacture the same product are competi-tors. They are in competition and they compete for customers. To be ahead of its rivals the company must be competitive.

An area where there is a demand for certain goods is called a market. A company selling locally sells its goods in the local market, if a company sells its goods at the same place where they are produced, it uses the home or domestic market. A firm selling abroad is an exporter. It sells on the in-ternational or overseas market. The goods it exports are exports. An importer buys goods abroad and imports them into his own country.

When a proprietor wants to expand the business, one way to do so is to form a partnership, a business formed for profit by two or more co-owners. The rights and duties of a partnership are regulated by laws of the state where it is formed and by a legal agreement entered into by the co-owners. Usually an agreement specifies the amount of money each is investing and the duties each partner assumes. A partnership agreement also may provide for a "silent partner" who does not take part in the management, but who invests money in the business.

The partnership has the advantage of pooling managerial talent. The partner may be qualified in production, another in marketing. The partnership, like individual ownership, is exempt from most of the reporting that the government requires of corporations. Furthermore, it has a favourable tax position when compared with the corporation. Federal taxes are paid by individual partners on their share of earnings; beyond that the business is not taxed.

A major disadvantage of the partnership is that each member is liable /brail the debts of the partnership; the act of any partner is legally binding upon all the others. If one partner takes a large amount of money from the business and squanders it, the others must pay the debt. Partnerships suffer another major disadvantage: decision-making is shared. If partners have serious disagreements, the business is bound to suffer.

Nevertheless, the partnership remains a vital part of the overall business economy.

Approaches to selection vary significantly across cultures. There are differences not only in the priorities that are given to technical or interpersonal capabilities, but also in the ways that candidates are tested and interviewed for the desired qualities.

Comparing such cultures as Anglo-Saxon, Germanic, Latin and Far Eastern we can see that in Anglo-Saxon cultures, what is generally tested is how much the individual can contribute to the tasks of the organization. In these cultures, assessment centers, intelligence tests and measurements of competencies are the norm. In the UK there was a much greater tendency to use panel interviews; in addition almost 74 % companies there use references from previous employers. What UK jobseekers consider an essential piece of information – what the post pays and also other material incentives including a car and fringe benefits. The attention given to rewards indicates the importance of the job and its responsibility. As for qualifications – beyond degree level make employers nervous. British managers are not selected primarily for their intelligence; instead they give the importance to social, political and leadership skills.

In Germanic cultures, the emphasis is more on the quality of education in a specialist function. First, German job seekers don't pay so much attention to salary; they consider it not to be an essential piece of information. German advertisements rarely mention other material incentives. Great attention is paid to the level of experience and qualifications demanded. Salary can be assumed to correspond with this. Moreover German adverts are vague about material rewards, they usually demand 'a degree in ...' not simply 'a degree'. In Germany it's difficult to be overqualified. German managers are selected primarily for the expert knowledge. German advertisements like achievement, but it tends to be less personally-driven. Their companies want candidates with sound knowledge, experience and competence in their field.

The recruitment process in Latin and Far Eastern cultures is very often characterized by ascertaining how well that person 'fits in' with the larger group. This is determined in part by the elitism higher education institution such as The University of Tokyo in Japan, and in part by their interpersonal style and ability to network internally. People of Latin culture tend to be more about personality, communication and social skills. Some international companies of Far East have identified very specific qualities that they consider strategically important and that support their business requirements.

Coming to conclusion we may notice even the tone of the job advertisement is different in these cultures. So Latin and Far Eastern cultures regard recruitment and selection as intellectually complex, the Germans as technically complex, and the British as interpersonally complex, but they agree on one thing: it's complex.

It is impossible to imagine our television, newspapers, radio, Internet and even streets without advertisements. Nowadays advertising plays an important role in modern life and in the life of every person. We can't imagine our life without advertising because every day we hear or see advertising, we try to find information we need in hundreds of advertisements. Even when we go for a walk or just shopping we see a lot of different advertisements in the streets.

Advertising serves to notify in various ways the new goods or services and their consumer properties, and is directed to the potential consumer, paid by the sponsor and serves for promotion of its production and ideas. Advertising is a part of communication activity of a firm, alongside with publicity and stimulation of selling. Advertising unessentially imposes the goods on the buyer. Sometimes it simply forces to recollect the last concrete mark or the name of the goods or service when the customer makes the choice.

There are a lot of definitions of the word "advertising". For example, advertising is collective term for public announcements designed to promote the sale of specific commodities or services. Advertising is a form of mass selling, employed when the use of direct, person-to-person selling is impractical, impossible, or simply inefficient. It is to be distinguished from other activities intended to persuade the public, such as propaganda, publicity, and public relations.

Modern advertising is an integral segment of urban industrial civilization, reflecting contemporary life in its best and worst aspects. The basic underlying advertising idea is the idea of human needs. Need is the feeling of shortage of something experienced by the person.

The second initial idea of advertising is the idea of human requirements. Requirement is the need which has accepted the specific form according to a cultural level and the personal features of the individual. Requirements of people are practically boundless, but resources for their satisfaction are limited. So the person will choose those goods which will give him or her the greatest satisfaction within the framework of his or her financial opportunities.

The structure of advertising contains the following five basic moments:

- The first one, it possesses the ability to draw attention.
- The second one, the force of influence of advertising on the emotions of consumers.
- The third one, how strong is the force of influence.
- The fourth one is its informative value.
- And the last, the fifth one, we should know for sure whether the person will want to read the message or to see an advertising roller up to the end. We must know how effectively advertising gains attention of the people.

Organizations that frequently spend large sums of money on advertising that sells what is not, strictly speaking, a product or service include political parties, interest groups, religious organizations, and military recruiters. Non-profit organizations are not typical advertising clients, and may rely on free modes of persuasion, such as public service announcements.

While advertising can be seen as necessary for economic growth, it is not without social costs.

Advertising is an essential part of business. Ads are necessary either for the manufacturer or for the buyer.

Civilization has made a great step in the development of advertising. It has turned into a powerful global network from primitive cries. I think that we can also name our present day era "the era of advertising", because everything is advertised and everything can be found in adverts.

Cultural differences are an important factor when it comes to how and what managers should learn and from whom. Different cultural responses to management education are particularly revealing. For example, German and Swiss managers tend to favour structured learning situations with clear pedagogical objectives, detailed course outlines and schedules, and the «right answer» or superior solution. This is very much in contrast with the view typically held by people from Anglo-Saxon culture such as Britain and the USA. Most British participants in courses dislike a structure that is too rigid. They tend to prefer more open-ended learning situations with loose objectives and practical tasks. The suggestion that there could be only one correct answer is less acceptable to them. The idea of working in groups may come more naturally to Asian managers than to the more individualistic Anglo-Saxons. On the other hand, Asian participants experience more difficulty having to «sell» their ideas in a group, with the potential for open disagreement and conflict, and therefore possible loss of face. Nor do they quite see the point of learning from other students who are no more knowledgeable than themselves. Wisdom resides in the hierarchy.

Group discussions may seem perfectly natural to Americans, who have been encouraged as students to express their own ideas and opinions. British students too have been educated to challenge and debate the ideas put forth by each other, including the teacher. British culture values the ability to prove one's case, eloquently, even at the expense of others. Anglo-Saxon culture is more tolerant of confrontation and uncertainty, and is less concerned with status differences, either among participants or between themselves and the teacher. This can be quite a shock to students from Asia and many Central European countries, who are not used to either voicing their opinion in class, disagreeing with each other, or actively debating with the professor. Training that makes extensive use of case studies, business games, and management exercises such as role-plays, favours learning by doing rather than learning by lecture and reading. As a result, European managers may not always see the point of some complain that seminars conducted by US trainers are not sufficiently serious or theoretical. US managers, on the other hand, want training to be more concrete, practical and fun.

With each culture favouring different training and development practices, it may be difficult to integrate these into a coherent or consistency policy within an international organization. However, standardising training methods may be important if the company needs to communicate specialised knowledge quickly across different units, or if the special quality of the company training programmes is regarded as a major source of attracting new recruits.

On the other hand, multinational companies may have a lot to gain from cross-fertilising different approaches, and providing opportunities for training and development that appeal to people with different abilities, learning styles, educational backgrounds, and, of course, and cultures. In fact, working with groups of managers from different countries often requires a mixed pedagogical approach, as well as the use of trainers of different nationalities.

Working abroad to acquire international experience is an important part of an international manager's development. The chance to spend a few years abroad at the company's expense can see like a dream come true. But if you don't take time to consider the impact your decision will have on your career, then it could turn into a nightmare.

Working overseas can broaden employee's perspectives and help the employability in future. They can acquire an enormous amount of experience and superb overview of the industry.

People willing to work abroad have two ways of making career. Some of them apply for overseas postings to be able to exercise their talent implement new strategies and use their outgoing personalities to make the company lots of money out of local business. But at the same time overseas postings can leave you out of touch with changes at head office. It happens if you ignore the need to network and research the new job back in home country. For many people the achievements abroad count for nothing. They find the expatriate existence "shallow". Integration with the local community is extremely difficult for them and they realize that there's always an underline background stress. However with the pool of potential employees who are willing to accept overseas posting shrinking "the remaining candidates" may not represent the best possible selection.

If you want to avoid all these problems you should consider the time abroad carefully and work into the career development strategy. You are better to go away for no more than two year or else you risk losing touch with new developments and your vitally important network of contacts.

Unless you maintain contact in your home country you will find it really difficult to readjust and reintegrate on your return.

ТЕКСТ 1

The most typical characteristics people use speaking about society are usually sounded like: pollution, welfare, bureaucracy, working hours, GM foods, medical care, convenience foods, public services and longevity. But let's find out what society is. It is the people in a particular area of country who have the same customs and laws. It is like an alive organism which is developed with every sphere of human-beings' activity and it differs from one country to another.

There are following types of society such as traditional, modern, developed and undeveloped and several new types which shows the way people life. By now we can determine post – industrial society – is a type no longer relying on heavy industry, consumer – where buying and selling is considered to be very important and throw – away in which things are not made to last a long time.

Moreover every society can be divided into groups, classes and tend to have particular characteristics.

As for Russian society nowadays it can't even be characterized with one type of description only but with a combination of features. And in my opinion this fact helps us understand how essentially different it can be. Let's examine our society deeper. I'd like to underline welfare. This very point determines the way of life and its quality.

Actually welfare becomes a crucial moment and, of course, I don't like this fact.

For example, if you need a good medical care you'd pay for it and so get the best doctors and treatment. When you want to get some kind of public service it would be more efficient if you pay. Money runs the world. It's a statement of contemporary life and that's why if you don't have money you'll have to come over inefficient public service such as bad medicine or bureaucracy thriving in every possible place. It'll take you much more time to do something finding yourself in overcrowded rooms waiting for your turn.

Moreover wealthy people can allow themselves not to use convenience and GM foods which are the false friends of women. They just hire a housekeeper who cooks and cleans the house for them bringing the time economy for being able to put up with long working hours and kiss their children before going to bed.

So, in the struggle for health, beauty and longevity the welfare takes the first place again. It's sad but our society depends on welfare more than ever. It becomes the most important value in the world.

ТЕКСТ 2

Approaches to selection vary significantly across cultures. There are differences not only in the priorities that are given to technical or interpersonal capabilities, but also in the ways that candidates are tested and interviewed for the desired qualities.

Comparing such cultures as Anglo-Saxon, Germanic, Latin and Far Eastern we can see that in Anglo-Saxon cultures, what is generally tested is how much the individual can contribute to the tasks of the organization. In these cultures, assessment centers, intelligence tests and measurements of competencies are the norm. In the UK there was a much greater tendency to use panel interviews; in addition almost 74 % companies there use references from previous employers. What UK jobseekers consider an essential piece of information – what the post pays and also other material incentives including a car and fringe benefits. The attention given to rewards indicates the importance of the job and its responsibility. As for qualifications – beyond degree level make employers nervous. British managers are not selected primarily for their intelligence; instead they give the importance to social, political and leadership skills.

In Germanic cultures, the emphasis is more on the quality of education in a specialist function. First, German job seekers don't pay so much attention to salary; they consider it not to be an essential piece of information. German advertisements rarely mention other material incentives. Great attention is paid to the level of experience and qualifications demanded. Salary can be assumed to correspond with this. Moreover German adverts are vague about material rewards, they usually demand 'a degree in ...' not simply 'a degree'. In Germany it's difficult to be overqualified. German managers are selected primarily for the expert knowledge. German advertisements like achievement, but it tends to be less personally-driven. Their companies want candidates with sound knowledge, experience and competence in their field.

The recruitment process in Latin and Far Eastern cultures is very often characterized by ascertaining how well that person 'fits in' with the larger group. This is determined in part by the elitism higher education institution such as The University of Tokyo in Japan, and in part by their interpersonal style and ability to network internally. People of Latin culture tend to be more about personality, communication and social skills. Some international companies of Far East have identified very specific qualities that they consider strategically important and that support their business requirements.

Coming to conclusion we may notice even the tone of the job advertisement is different in these cultures. So Latin and Far Eastern cultures regard recruitment and selection as intellectually complex, the Germans as technically complex, and the British as interpersonally complex, but they agree on one thing: it's complex.

ТЕКСТ 3

Cultural differences are an important factor when it comes to how and what managers should learn and from whom. Different cultural responses to management education are particularly revealing. For example, German and Swiss managers tend to favor structured learning situations with clear pedagogical objectives, detailed course outlines and schedules, and the «right answer» or superior solution. This is very much in contrast with the view typically held by people from Anglo-Saxon culture such as Britain and the USA. Most British participants in courses dislike a structure that is too rigid. They tend to prefer more open-ended learning situations with loose objectives and practical tasks. The suggestion that there could be only one correct answer is less acceptable to them. The idea of working in groups may come more naturally to Asian managers than to the more individualistic Anglo-Saxons. On the other hand, Asian participants experience more difficulty having to «sell» their ideas in a group, with the potential for open disagreement and conflict, and therefore possible loss of face. Nor do they quite see the point of learning from other students who are no more knowledgeable than themselves. Wisdom resides in the hierarchy.

Group discussions may seem perfectly natural to Americans, who have been encouraged as students to express their own ideas and opinions. British students too have been educated to challenge and debate the ideas put forth by each other, including the teacher. British culture values the ability to prove one's case, eloquently, even at the expense of others. Anglo-Saxon culture is more tolerant of confrontation and uncertainty, and is less concerned with status differences, either among participants or between themselves and the teacher. This can be quite a shock to students from Asia and many Central European countries, who are not used to either voicing their opinion in class, disagreeing with each other, or actively debating with the professor.

Training that makes extensive use of case studies, business games, and management exercises such as role-plays, favors learning by doing rather than learning by lecture and reading. As a result, European managers may not always see the point of some complain that seminars conducted by US trainers are not sufficiently serious or theoretical. US managers, on the other hand, want training to be more concrete, practical and fun.

With each culture favoring different training and development practices, it may be difficult to integrate these into a coherent or consistency policy within an international organization. However, standardizing training methods may be important if the company needs to communicate specialized knowledge quickly across different units, or if the special quality of the company training programs is regarded as a major source of attracting new recruits.

On the other hand, multinational companies may have a lot to gain from cross-fertilizing different approaches, and providing opportunities for training and development that appeal to people with different abilities, learning styles, educational backgrounds, and, of course, and cultures. In fact, working with groups of managers from different countries often requires a mixed pedagogical approach, as well as the use of trainers of different nationalities.

8. МЕТОДИЧЕСКИЕ УКАЗАНИЯ ДЛЯ ОБУЧАЮЩИХСЯ ПО ОСВОЕНИЮ ДИСЦИПЛИНЫ (МОДУЛЯ)

В соответствии с требованиями ФГОС ВО по направлению подготовки реализация компетентностного подхода предусматривает использование в учебном процессе активных и интерактивных форм проведения занятий (разбор конкретных задач, проведение блиц-опросов, исследовательские работы) в сочетании с внеаудиторной работой с целью формирования и развития профессиональных навыков обучающихся.

Удельный вес занятий, проводимых в интерактивной форме, составляет не менее 15 % аудиторных занятий (определяется ФГОС с учетом специфики ОПОП).

Лекционные занятия дополняются ПЗ и различными формами СРС с учебной и научной литературой. В процессе такой работы студенты приобретают навыки «глубокого чтения» - анализа и интерпретации текстов по методологии и методике дисциплины.

Учебный материал по дисциплине «Иностранный язык в профессиональной деятельности» разделен на логически завершенные части (разделы), после изучения, которых предусматривается аттестация в форме письменных тестов, контрольных работ.

Работы оцениваются в баллах, сумма которых дает рейтинг каждого обучающегося. В баллах оцениваются не только знания и навыки обучающихся, но и их творческие возможности: активность, неординарность решений поставленных проблем. Каждый раздел учебной дисциплины включает обязательные виды работ – ПЗ, различные виды СРС (выполнение домашних заданий по решению задач, подготовка к практическим занятиям).

Форма текущего контроля знаний – работа студента на практическом занятии, опрос. Форма промежуточных аттестаций – контрольная работа в аудитории, домашняя работа. Итоговая форма контроля знаний по разделам – контрольная работа или опрос.

Методические указания по выполнению учебной работы размещены в электронной образовательной среде академии
